

""Twitter handle (and profile name): civicdesign (Center for Civic Design)

Twitter description: Center for Civic Design ~ Democracy is a design problem ~ Civic design researchers and designers. Creators of the Field Guides To Ensuring Voter Intent

Description of the organization from a third party source: "We believe that democracy is a design problem. Our work in civic design includes research, practical projects, and knowledge sharing through training, and advocacy. Our approach is collaborative, bringing together stakeholders to improve election and civic engagement."

Scraped text from their home page of their website: Titles: Center for Civic Design

Headings: Democracy is a design problem.; Civic Design Skills; Tools; Running Elections; Research

Paragraphs: ; Elections should work for everyone. We're here to make that happen.; A few core skills are at the heart of our work. Bolster your knowledge of plain language, accessibility, and other principles.; Explore our library of usable tools and templates. Put them to use in your elections office today.; We support states and counties in running efficient, effective, and secure elections. See how we've improved aspects of the voter experience.; Our work is based on research with real voters and election offices from around the country.; email:hello@civicdesign.org; phone:410-921-6811; (C) 2024 Center for Civic Design_x000D_

Design by Oxide Design Co.

Scraped text from their about page of their website: Titles: About | Center for civic design

Headings: About; Key supporters and partners; About us; Newsletters; Get in touch; Support the Center for Civic Design

Paragraphs: To us, democracy is a design problem.; The centerpiece of solving that problem is ensuring voter intent through design. Our goal is to make every interaction with government easy, effective, and pleasant.; Through our work, we have helped hundreds of election officials create the materials that are the touchpoints of the voter journey, and touched millions of voters in important ways.; We bring civic design skills in research, usability, design, accessibility, and plain language to improve the voting experience, make elections easier to run, and invite participation in elections.; The voter journey-all of the information, decisions, interactions that get a voter from an intention to vote to actually casting a ballot-is a story of seemingly small barriers that can add up to a vote not cast. We aim to smooth out those barriers, help more people vote, and strengthen democracy.; We approach the challenge of democracy as a design problem through the intersection of voters, elections administration, and policy.; Elections place too many burdens on voters. We start with the voter experience, because the burdens on voters-especially those who have been historically disenfranchised-contribute to low participation and a break down in trust in US elections.; Elections need excellent design. Election materials can be confusing in ways that create barriers to for everyone: voters, officials, and advocates. When we work with elections offices, we not only help solve immediate problems but add to our toolkit of materials that can be used across the country.; We are also leading authorities on usability and accessibility for elections, helping set requirements for ballot design and voting systems from the first version of the Voluntary Voting System Guidelines.; Civic design starts with good policy. When policy is designed well, it invites participation. We bring a design approach to existing election procedures and to imagining how elections can engage voters with innovative new policies.; And individual donors; We are also supported by our partners in election departments across the country, with the generous gift of their time and expertise.; The Center for Civic Design is a 501(c)(3) non-profit educational research organization, registered in Maryland. Our Federal EIN is 46-3535619. Information about our governance or financial reporting is available on request.Official address: 5443 Bates Bank Road, Cambridge, MD 21613; Our team; Our principles; Join our team; Civic Designing Practical tips and civic design research; Civic Design IrregularsNews for our extended community; Email hello@civicedesign.orgPhone 410-921-6811Twitter @civicedesign; ; email:hello@civicedesign.org; phone:410-921-6811; (C) 2024 Center for Civic Design_x000D_

Design by Oxide Design Co.

Scraped text from their mission page of their website: Titles: NA

Headings: NA

Paragraphs: NA

Scraped text from their history page of their website: Titles: NA

Headings: NA

Paragraphs: NA

Summaries of Links: Based solely on the provided links, it can be inferred that Civic Design is an organization dedicated to improving the design of civic processes, with a focus on making elections more accessible, usable, and secure. They offer various resources, including toolkits, field guides, and research reports, to help election officials and designers create better election materials and systems. Civic Design also conducts research on voting-related topics, such as ballot design, voter education, and poll worker training. Additionally, they provide training and consulting services to help organizations improve their civic design practices. The organization appears to be committed to promoting civic engagement and ensuring that all voters have equal access to the electoral process."""