Twitter description: We think globally and work locally here in central Kentucky for a world that is more just, free from the scourge of war and more sustainable.

Description of the organization from a third party source: "The Central Kentucky Council for Peace and Justice (CKCPJ) is a coalition of peacemaking groups and individuals which addresses the whole fabric of peace and justice issues. Some choose to focus on peace within the individual, family and community while others emphasise issues of international peace. Despite their different talents and priorities, they all share a belief that peace and justice can be best advanced by sharing ideas and working together."

Summaries of Links: Based solely on the provided information, it can be inferred that this organization is likely focused on promoting peace and justice, potentially within the context of Kentucky. The presence of web pages such as "about_us.htm," "action.htm," and "peaceways.htm" suggests that the organization has a mission and is actively involved in taking action to further its cause. The inclusion of a "join.htm" page implies that the organization welcomes new members or supporters. The mention of a calendar and events suggests that the organization may organize events or activities related to its mission. The presence of social media links, such as Twitter and Facebook, indicates that the organization is active in engaging with the public and promoting its message through online platforms. The domain name "peaceandjusticeky.typepad.com" further reinforces the organization's focus on peace and justice in Kentucky. While the provided information does not explicitly state the specific goals or activities of the organization, it can be reasonably inferred that it is dedicated to promoting peace and justice, likely within the state of Kentucky.""
