Paragraphs: The Martin-Springer Institute is a leading institution in Arizona committed to learning from the past and engaging with the present. Our public educational programs and scholarly endeavors are based on the principles of intercultural understanding and dialogue.; The Martin-Springer Institute attends to the experiences of the Holocaust in order to relate them to today's concerns, crises, and conflicts. Our programs promote the values of moral courage, empathy, resilience, reconciliation, and justice. Founded by Doris, who survived the Holocaust, and her husband Ralph Martin, the Institute fosters dialogue on local, national, and international levels.; ; Looking at the history and legacy of the Holocaust, we observe that the seeds for destructive ideologies lie in fermenting social mistrust, dismantling democratic traditions, abolishing civility, and erecting systems of discrimination, violence, and terror. Today, social conflicts continue to threaten and harm communities, locally and globally.; What can be done? Education plays a crucial role in offering antidotes to forces that tear at the social fabric of communities. We engage students, educators, scholars, activists, community members on local, regional and national and international levels.; ;
