Twitter description: Peace Economy Project from St Louis, MO works to reduce military spending to fund community needs.

Description of the organization from a third party source: "The Peace Economy Project researches military spending, educates about the hazards of an unchecked military-industrial complex and advocates for conversion from a military- to a more stable, peace-based economy. We focus our attention on local weapons manufacturing, arms proliferation and worldwide militarization. We collaborate with other organizations to raise consciousness about where our tax dollars are invested and to encourage others to reinvest in their communities. Following Ferguson, PEP joined both the Don't Shoot Coalition and the Drone Free St. Louis coalition to work against increased police militarization, surveillance and armament. "
