Twitter description: A nervy bunch of liberals & conservatives who believe that disagreement + dialogue make for a good conversation, a good country and a good time.

Description of the organization from a third party source: "American college campuses deserve a speaker series worthy of the American embrace of competing ideas to innovate. Respect + Rebellion aims to provide it. Check out their speaker pairs who each disagree on the controversial issues of our time, but enjoy close personal and professional relationships that sustain constructive disagreement. In divided times like ours and through history, brave and unlikely friendships have endured, inspired and enlightened solutions. Bring this spirit to your campus or community."

Paragraphs: ; American college campuses deserve a speaker series worthy of the American embrace of competing ideas to innovate. Respect + Rebellion aims to provide it;; Universities have long been seen and experienced in Western cultures as a place where the ideals of free inquiry and deliberative democracy are embodied. But in recent years - and the fury of the American political debate has accelerated and people have isolated themselves in tribal media silos - colleges across the nation have become front-page news for alarming instances of censoring particular voices and protests escalating to near violence when two ideas come into conflict. Universities may now represent a kind of collective "canary in the coal mine" suggesting that the enlightenment value of the pursuit of truth is at real risk in such polarized times.; If escalating anger has a chance of becoming constructive engagement, it won't happen with a lame finger wag about how we're supposed to behave, it will be because we remembered that jumping into conversations about competing ideas is fascinating and it's the conversation we deserve.; There is so much we see in this generation of college students that suggests "hero generation" is an apt description for them - they have broadly shown a heroic devotion to protection of vulnerable groups in society, to causes larger than themselves, to a worldwide sense of justice and progress. We think they're poised for this challenge.; Respect + Rebellion is a project of The Village Square.; All the boring stuff is below.; BORING STUFF; Contacts;; Liz Joyner_x000D_

Summaries of Links: Based solely on the provided information, it can be inferred that this organization is likely focused on promoting respectful dialogue and encouraging rebellion against societal norms. The presence of sections such as "/ideas/", "/stories/", and "/speakers/" suggests that the organization provides a platform for individuals to share their thoughts, experiences, and perspectives. The inclusion of "/campus/" indicates a potential focus on engaging with college and university students. The organization's name, "Respect and Rebellion," further hints at its mission to foster a balance between respect for established norms and the courage to challenge them. The inclusion of links to other organizations dedicated to fostering civil discourse, open dialogue, and unbiased information further supports this inference. However, without additional context or information, it is difficult to determine the specific goals, activities, or initiatives undertaken by this organization."""
