Description of the organization from a third party source: "The McCourtney Institute for Democracy at Penn State draws from the humanities and social sciences to examine democracy from multiple angles. This cross-discipline collaboration is evident in our research, education, and outreach efforts. We educate the next generation of democratic citizens through our Nevins Fellows program, monitor attitudes toward democracy with the Mood of the Nation poll, host speakers and events that bring together people from diverse backgrounds and points of view, and produce a weekly podcast that brings discussions about democracy to thousands of listeners around the world."

Paragraphs: Brown Democracy Medal; Democracy Works Podcast; Nevins Fellows; Mood of the Nation Poll; What does it mean to be a partisan for democracy? We don't take sides on the political spectrum, but we do defend the rights everyone has as a democratic citizen - from voting to protesting to consuming information from a free press that serves as a check on political leaders.; The McCourtney Institute for Democracy draws from the humanities and social sciences to examine democracy from multiple angles. This cross-discipline collaboration is evident in our research, education, and outreach efforts.; We educate the next generation of democratic citizens through our Nevins Fellows program, monitor attitudes toward democracy with the Mood of the Nation poll, and host speakers and events that bring people from diverse backgrounds and points of view together to discuss the role of democracy in our society.; We make all of this happen in partnership with our centers of excellence, the Center for American Political Responsiveness and the Center for Democratic Deliberation, and many other organizations throughout the College of the Liberal Arts and the broader Penn State community.; The past few years haven't been easy for election officials and their teams. They had to pivot during the pandemic and face ongoing threats that have resulted in unprecedented staff turnover. This turmoil brings more scrutiny of errors that occur when people make honest mistakes.; Despite these challenges, Tammy Patrick, CEO for programs at the National Association of Election Officials, is confident that the tens of thousands of people charged with election administrators across the country this year will deliver free, fair, and secure elections. She's also optimistic about their ability to rise above threats and uphold their commitment to democracy.; Patrick has been working in the election administration space since 2003, most recently as the Senior Advisor to the Elections Program at Democracy Fund. Focusing on modern elections, she works to foster a voter-centric elections system and support election officials across the country.; In this conversation, we dive deeper into what's in store for election workers this year and how Patrick and her team are helping them prepare to stand up against everything from misinformation campaigns to threats of physical violence.; More Episodes; There are no upcoming events right now. Paragraphs: Confronting the precarious condition of democracy in the US and around the world, The McCourtney Institute for Democracy promotes scholarship and practical innovations in order to preserve and advance democracy.; Through teaching, research, and public outreach, the Institute leverages the resources of Penn State to defend democratic practices and foster democratic citizenship.; We achieve our mission through interdisciplinary scholarship. The Institute operates through two centers-the Center for Democratic Deliberation (CDD) and the Center for American Political Responsiveness (CAPR). The CDD attends to the communication practices that make democratic deliberation possible, whereas CAPR addresses the way that governments translate citizen demands into public policy.; The McCourtney Institute for Democracy began as the Democracy Institute in 2012. In 2014, Tracy and Ted McCourtney gave a transformative $3 million gift to secure the Institute's future.; John Gastil served as the Institute's founding director from 2012-2016. Mark Major served as associate director. Christopher Beem was hired as managing director in 2015 and Michael Berkman became director in 2016.; The Center for Democratic Deliberation was founded in 2006 as nonpartisan, interdisciplinary center for research on issues of rhetorical education, democratic deliberation, and forms of dissent.; The Center for American Political Responsiveness was founded in 2011 as an interdisciplinary academic center that investigates questions of democratic governance and public policy.
